Dear Friends:

We hope that you feel that this, our second fixed price list, is different from other lists. It is, of course. The difference is the quantity of quality. All of the best coins we have are published in our list. What you are offered are not the left-overs which our preferred customers have rejected, but the freshest and finest we have. There are many coins in stock which are not in our list and start from $2.00 each.

Some of the coins in the list are marked "sold". Our entire stock turns approximately two times a year and it takes 5 to 7 weeks to produce this quality of a list, it follows that some of our coins are sold. We then mark them so, so that the list will be as current as possible when you receive it.

Lastly, we have a very comfortable private office, where you may see many coins in comfort and privacy. If you are serious about numismatics, whether you spend $5.00 or $35,000.00, feel free to make an appointment and come in to view our coins and to make use of our fine and growing library.

Notes on A.B. Cook and Fane Dickson Collections

It was in March 1948 that this catalogue was adumbrated, when Mr. Seaby, in his "A Dealer's Dream" in our Bulletin of that month, wrote "It has long been our hope to publish some day a Catalogue of Greek Coins but our stock has never been sufficiently representative to make it worth while." By a fortunate chance, the next month brought us the highly interesting collection formed by Professor Arthur Bernard Cook, Vice-President of Queens' College, Cambridge. Dr. Cook's collection had been brought together by many years' work and contained some unique and many extremely rare pieces; and although it was a student's collection, i.e., more consideration had been given to the historical interest of the coins acquired art. With this collection, it yet contained some very notable examples of the moneyer's art. With this collection as a nucleus, and additions from such collections as the Fane-Dickson, the present work has been compiled.

81. Athens, 406-393 B.C., tetradrachm, "money of necessity". Head of Athena r., of archaic style, wearing round earring and close-fitting crested helmet adorned with three up-right olive leaves and floral ornament. Rx. Owl r., head facing and wings closed; behind, spray of olive and crescent; all in incuse square. 15.52gms. After an unfortunate expedition to Sicily which created a shortage of silver, the Athenians were compelled in 407 B.C. to convert the gold statues of Nike in the Parthenon to coin. This was done towards the close of the Peloponnesian war in order to equip a completely new fleet. In 406 B.C., the situation had not improved and as the citizens could not use gold staters for daily transactions, Athens resorted to bronze tetradrachm with a silver wash as a money of necessity. These coins continued as legal money for 13 years until in 394, Conon won a great naval victory which restored Athens to prosperity. At this time silver was declared the only legal tender, thus demonetizing the "frogs" as Aristophanes referred to them. Due to the great unpopularity of the "money of necessity" very few survived. A coin the state of ours, with 80% of the original silver wash intact, is excessively rare, for those which are genuine, most are entirely of bronze. Though some have a few flecks of silver, one with this amount of silver is almost unheard of. Most of the "money of necessity" offered today are fourrie; contemporary forgeries. The real "money of necessity" are only silver washed, not plated.
